The Capital City Pharmacy Medical Reserve Corps Health Fair in LeDroit Park was a resounding success. Student pharmacists from the Howard University College of Pharmacy reached out to the historically black neighborhood to boost community health. Local residents were counseled on widespread chronic health conditions from asthma to diabetes, while being treated to healthy food and fun games. Third-year student pharmacist Seid Suleyman stated:

“Reaching back out to local communities...ensures that we as healthcare providers never forget the people we serve, and that the support we get from these communities is paid forward tenfold.”
